The hooded sex attacker who raped a middle-aged woman more than a month ago is still at large, writes LORNA PRICHARD.

South Wales Police has this week confirmed the female was sexually assaulted while walking home from work in broad daylight.

Chief Inspector Liane Bartlett, based at Aberdare, insisted the investigation was being conducted 'meticulously' and called for the public's patience as they continue to track down the Cynon Valley rapist.

The woman was walking her dog near the Cae Pugh playing fields in Cwmdare early in the morning when she was approached by a heavily-built man of scruffy appearance with decaying teeth.
