A woman has been detained by police after she called them claiming to have been raped.

Police said the woman, surnamed Chen called 110 early on the morning of January 2, saying she had been raped by a man near Xinfeng Road N. in Qingpu District.

When police arrived, they found she was drunk. She was taken to a police station where, after sobering up, she confessed that she had made up the story, police said.

Chen told them she had called hoping they could find her boyfriend who had just broken up with her that night and had blacklisted her on WeChat.
