PULLMAN, Wash. - - Washington State University police say all three reports of females being attacked on campus during the first week of school are false.

Tuesday, officers say the woman who reported the second attack recanted her story during an interview on Monday night.

Reports of the first attack and third attack, which came from the same woman, were recanted last week.

Officers say the woman who reported the first and third attacks and the woman who reported the second attack did not know each other. Officers have not said what, if any, charges the women may face.

When news of the attacks first spread as the '09-'10 school year began, WSU President Elson Floyd contributed $5,000 of his own money as a reward to anyone who helped catch the suspect.

WSU Police now say that money will stay with their department and the Women's Resource Center as a possible reward in the future.
