A woman who reported she was sexually assaulted at gunpoint told investigators Tuesday she made the story up.

Police are looking into "the whole situation," and it's possible the woman could eventually face charges.

The woman had reported she was forced into a car at gunpoint Saturday evening while walking near Challenger Park. She said the suspect drove her to an undeveloped neighborhood and raped her, and she provided investigators with a description of the suspect and the suspect vehicle.

The woman recontacted investigators Tuesday and said she had lied.
