Maryland prosecution officials have dropped charges against a York man who the U.S. Marshals Service arrested Wednesday.

Collin Mailman, 22, of York, was arrested by members of the U.S. Marshals Service Fugitive Task Force for an alleged sexual assault near Baltimore.

In a press release, officials said they arrested and charged Mailman with second-degree rape among other charges at a home in the 200 block of Country Club Road in York.

Officials said the Baltimore County Police Department was investigating an alleged sexual assault against a woman outside of Baltimore on July 19. The investigation resulted in police issuing a warrant for Mailman's arrest.

The task force picked up the search after Baltimore County police were unsuccessful in locating Mailman.

Maryland attorney Thomas J. Maronick Jr. issued with a statement on behalf of Mailman:

"The Mailman family and Mr. Mailman are deeply grateful to the State's Attorney's Office in Baltimore County for taking the appropriate action and dismissing all charges against him, as well as for the work of the Baltimore County police detectives in coming to this decision," Maronick said.

He continued, "From the beginning, we have said these charges were completely false and would have vigorously defended against them in court, had this proceeded to trial. Mr. Mailman is a talented young man with a bright future and we will be proceeding to seek expungement of these charges at the earliest opportunity. It has been a difficult 24 hours to be sure but thankfully this is the right outcome."
