

Woman who falsely claimed she was raped by three men because she regretted having sex with them jailed for two years

Rosie Dodd, 20, claimed men - aged 21, 23 and 25 - assaulted her at a home

Trio arrested and Dodd said they raped her after meeting on night out

Men spent total of 50 hours in police custody

Deceit: Rosie Dodd was jailed for two years for crying rape because she regretted having sex with three men at a drunken orgy

A woman who cried rape because she regretted having sex with three men at a drunken orgy has been jailed for two years for her 'wicked' lies.

Rosie Dodd, 20, had been out drinking when she met the men, aged 25, 23, and 21, and started groping one of them on a bus on the way home.

She had sex with them one after the other, but after telling a friend she felt 'dirty' she lied to police that she had been raped.

The men, two of them students, then suffered a 'nightmare' involving intimate examinations and being locked up in cells.

But after police became concerned about inconsistencies in Dodd's account, she admitted the encounters had been consensual.

Last night she was put behind bars. On a social networking website, she has left displayed numerous photographs of herself with a string of men, apparently taken as trophies of her conquests.

Jailing Dodd at Nottingham crown court, Judge John Milmo told her: 'None of these three lads had seen the inside of a police station before.

'They may well have been wrongly convicted if these charges had gone to trial. It was ten days before police managed to talk to you – and you admitted your allegations had been completely untrue. I am told, from your perspective, it was easier to tell lies rather than tell the truth.

'I have no idea why you decided to make these wicked allegations.'

Dodd went out drinking in Nottingham city centre in June, downing eight vodkas and ending up in a casino.

There she met one of her numerous ex-boyfriends and through him met the trio.

She and the three men took a bus to a house in the Clifton area of the city, and during the journey she began groping one of them.

In the house she willingly had sex with all three.

But afterwards she texted a friend saying that she felt 'dirty'. With that in mind she claimed to police that all three of her partners had raped her.

Deceit: Dodd met the three men on a night out in Nottingham but regretted bedding them all

Angry: Police have warned anybody who lies in the same way Dodd did will be found out

The men, who have not been named, were arrested on suspicion of rape and spent a total of 50 hours in custody before being released on bail.

After further enquiries police grew suspicious and, when challenged, Dodd admitted she had consensual sex with the men and made up the claims because she felt regret at sleeping with them.

But police said Dodd, of Nottingham, who is listed as in a relationship on a social media site, showed no remorse.

She was charged with perverting the course of justice and pleaded guilty at a previous hearing.

The court heard that one of her victims had recently graduated from university – but what should have been a time for celebration became a ‘nightmare’.

Another victim, who was also a student, said a medical investigation he was forced to go through was ‘awful’, and told of his embarrassment at having to detail the consensual sex he had had.

One of the men said he feared his plans to work with children in America would be wrecked by the episode, although police claimed any trace of the investigation would be wiped from their files. None of the men had any criminal record.

Hearing: Rosie Dodd admitted she had made up the rape claims because she regretted having consensual sex with the trio, Nottingham Crown Court was told today

Detective Constable Gina Farrell, who led the investigation, said: 'We take every report of rape and sexual assault extremely seriously.'

'But it soon became apparent that there were inconsistencies with Dodd's account.'

'The three men accused of rape were quite badly affected by the damaging accusations and Dodd has never shown an ounce of remorse for what she put them through.'

'The time our specially-trained officers spent with her could have been spent with someone who really needed our help.'

Detective Inspector Stephen Waldram, head of the city Rape Investigation Team, said: 'I would remind anyone considering making a false report to think again.'

'We carry out extremely thorough and in-depth investigations and their lies will be exposed.'

Interesting. In the US even if the sex had been consensual, in some states she could have still claimed rape by "coercion" because of the alcohol and the three men would have been on trial. Not that it's "right" or "moral" by any means to cast the entire blame for one's actions on the men involved or blame the alcohol and accuse them of taking advantage, but it has been done. Just an observation in the differences in our legal systems. Also, if she had recounted her rape accusation, she would not face charges in most states either. I think this course of action (charging her with false accusations and making her pay a price) certainly deters false claims. I agree with the above comments, that she has just made the world a thousand times harder for sexually abused and assaulted females.

These young men were humiliated. Where are the feminists decrying this?

Horrible article. Having a foursome with a stranger is morally dubious. Great to know that a guy who participated in the orgy can now work with children, safe in the knowledge that none of this remains in his records. How biased an article is this? oh one of the guys just graduated from University! poor darling, that didn't put much sense in him, did it? The way this article attacks the woman is despicable (she had numerous boyfriends, trophies...) Her false rape claim deserves a penalty, but not such a one-sided attack on her character. 3 guys had sex with a drunken woman, come on they are no angels!

Rape is a dreadful crime. This however goes to show that someone should not be: 1. Assumed guilty by the press/public on the basis of an accusation. People actually lose their jobs because of this and are sometimes the target of abuse/physical violence due to the way they have been portrayed in the media and the likely assumptions society makes. 2. Found guilty by a court on the basis of an accusation without definite proof. I am not sure if this happens in the UK however I have read about it happening in the US. The penalty for this woman should have been far greater than 2 years. She could have potentially ruined the lives of three people and has already affected their lives irreversibly.

She was a woman of her time, encouraged by society to behave in the way she did with the three men, when she looked back at her behaviour, did she not feel ashamed knowing it had demeaned her, or that it was just plainly wrong. Had the people who encouraged, formed this society the liberal/left/feminists been in that dock, that young woman would never have been in this situation.

This is an absolute disgrace of a woman, people genuinely raped who are too scared to report it. She could have ruined these mens lives and that of their families, the judge in these cases should give the woman the same sentence to the woman as if he was sentencing a man who was guilty. Shame ion this woman, shame .

Two years is more than sufficient. Men who actually rape get less or get away with it. Fact. The misogynists on here need to calm down.

It's nice to see that in Britian a woman who lies about rape suffers some sort of punishment.In America they are never given any time behind bars and are usually never charged with anything.
